For anybody who is unfamiliar with the concept of second half (2H) betting, it's quite simple. Whenever a game goes into the 2nd half, the oddsmakers will quickly post the 2H line for the second half. This reflects the outcome of the game if it goes to the 2nd half. The 2H line is usually higher than the 1st half line. For example, if the 1st half line is 1.50, the 2nd half line might be 1.75. This is because the odds are based on the probability of the team winning in the 2nd half, which is generally lower than the probability of winning in the 1st half.

For standard half bets, the odds are usually higher than for the full game. And, the odds for overtime are also higher. The standard is that overtime counts as part of the game unless on the 1st quarter or period.
